

6th National CME on Audits in Infection Prevention & Control

18th & 19th January 2019

Audits are an integral part of any quality improvement process. Infection prevention & control is an essential component of the quality improvement process of every Healthcare Organization. Healthcare workers do not receive any formal training in understanding, conducting and analysing audit processes, within their academic training programmes (medical or nursing). This CME serves to bridge this gap.

This CME is being organized by the Infection Control Team at Breach Candy Hospital Trust, Mumbai consecutively for the last five years. As has been our practice, we intend to keep the sessions interactive so that participants can gain from the expertise of the speakers and can also discuss problems faced by them. From last year we have introduced live demonstration for audits which was very much appreciated by our delegates. In addition this year, delegates will be given an opportunity to conduct audits in some departments of our hospital to experience the process of doing the audit, analysing, preparing & presenting the audit report.

Objective: To understand the role of audits in improvising infection control practices in healthcare settings.

Target audience: Healthcare workers including physicians, microbiologists, nurses, other allied staff with interest in infection prevention & control will be preferred. Post graduate medical/nursing students and those who have recently completed PG may also attend.
